Call for YRE Editors

Want to become a journal editor? Benefit from an exciting training project!

The series Young Researcher Editorial (YRE) of the International Journal of Public Health (IJPH) publishes editorials written by PhD students from around the world. The series is a joint training project of SSPH+ and IJPH to give PhD students a voice in public health discussions and to train them in journal editing.

The series was founded in 2018 and has published 50 editorials since then (see here and here for past editorials). The series is edited autonomously by PhD students of the Swiss School of Public Health (SSPH+). Currently, we are a team of six YRE editors and we are looking for more to participate in this unique and very exciting project!

As an YRE editor you will prescreen and peer review submitted YRE. As a team we organize and develop the series, run Calls for YRE, and discuss editorial decisions. You will benefit from improving your writing and reviewing skills, understand the editorial processes, also technically by having access to a professional platform, being visible and much more. SSPH+ honors the investment of the YRE board with 1 ECTS (YRE editor-in-chief: 2 ECTS).

We invite PhD students from all 14 universities and universities of applied sciences affiliated with the SSPH+!

The Call is open for application from March 15, 2026 to May 31, 2026. We are looking for highly-motivated advanced SSPH+ PhD students (~3rd year) with publication experience.

Please send us your CV with publication list (optional: researcher ID, e.g. Orcid), a short motivation letter (200 words), and a short statement of approval of your application from your supervisor by email to Germán Guerra (german.guerra@etu.unige.ch) and Enxhi Qama (enxhi.qama@paraplegie.ch). Feel free to reach out to us if you have any questions.

We look forward to your application!
